

SOME RESPONSES TO STONE CANOE'S INAUGURAL ISSUE

"Stone Canoe is a wonderful instance of "scholarship in action," an occasion for fresh conversation about the meaning of public art and the institution's role in fostering it."

Nancy Cantor, Chancellor and President, Syracuse University

"Stone Canoe is beautifully done, and its solid first issue demonstrates that great things are happening Upstate."

Raymond Hammond, Editor, The New York Quarterly

"Stone Canoe is one of the handsomest magazines I've seen. What a collection, and what a group of notable writers."

W.D. Snodgrass, winner of the Pulitzer Prize for poetry and former Syracuse University professor

"Stone Canoe is gorgeous! I'm very, very proud to be part of this distinguished new publication. The art work is stunning. The readers of the Syracuse community have something extraordinary to celebrate."

Rhina P. Espaillat, winner of the T.S. Eliot Prize from the Academy of American Poets and designee for Syracuse University's 2006 Stephen Crane Memorial Lecture

"How handsome Stone Canoe is...it seems to be off to a rollicking start."

Stephen Dunn, winner of the Pulitzer Prize for poetry and Syracuse alumnus

"I am seldom this effusive when a new lit journal hits the world—but this one is gorgeous—one terrific launch."

Thom Ward, Editor, BOA Editions, Ltd.

"I've never seen a stronger launch for a new literary journal, or a better first issue."

Johanna Keller, Director, Goldring Arts Journalism Program, Syracuse University

"Stone Canoe looks magnificent and reads just as wonderfully—a triumph!"

Minnie Bruce Pratt, winner of the Lamont Poetry Prize and Syracuse University professor

"Stone Canoe is bigger and grander than I expected—I will be reading for weeks! And the art work is exceedingly well chosen."

Robert Phillips, Cullen Distinguished Professor, University of Houston, and recipient of the Syracuse University Arents Pioneer Medal

"Stone Canoe's mission seems to be in considerable part the reviving of the culture—the thereness and placeness—of Upstate New York."

Henry Allen, Washington Post writer and winner of the Pulitzer Prize for criticism
